Like Lambs to Slaughter.

Among the victims of the dreadful railway wreck on the Santa Fe near Sheffield a few weeks ago was a fine looking Swiss boy, dressed neatly in the garb of the peasantry of his country, says the Kansas City Star. His fair hair and youthful face attracted particular attention by those who viewed the dead. It was evident that he had come to the United States to better his lot and to seek more ample opportunities for advancement than his native land afforded him. Laid side by side with this comely lad were other foreigners killed in the wreck. With the security which distinguished railway travel in Europe, one may fancy the complete confidence with which these hopeful immigrants trusted themselves to the means of transportation which was to convey them to their several destinations. Homesick they may have been, and anxious concerning the future; but it may be assumed with absolute certainty that there was no thought of danger or death in their hearts. How unexpectably mournful was the reward of their assurance. What a rude violation of trust their tragical end appears. What a continual lesson to railway management in America is the awful list of mortality furnished each year by those who travel by rail in this country, and the well nigh complete immunity from harm and peril of those who use the same means of transportation in Europe.

Advantages of Missouri.

The gentlemen whose business it is to get Missouri farmers to sell out and go further west will be out of a job, says the Chillicothe Constitution, if they don't choke off statisticians of the labor bureau. Messrs. Nolan and Edmouston are showing forth the greatness of the state as it deserves to be shown. So varied are the industries of Missouri that people in one county have been practically ignorant of what was raised in the other 113, and the stories of the commonwealth's surplus products have caused many surprises. The trouble with Missourians has been that they have listened with open mouths and credulous minds to the immigration agents tell what farmers could do in Texas, Oklahoma, Washington or Oregon, and have failed to realize what was actually being done in Missouri. The labor bureau statisticians are performing a great service to their state by the attractive manner in which they are advertising its resources.

The Way We Look at It.

The strange part of this boyhood business is that we never grow old ourselves. It's always the other fellow. We feel just the same as we always did, but how the playmates and friends of those days have changed. Nature never did a kinder thing than when it was ordered that age should creep over us silently and unconsciously as the falling of the night. That's why you see so many jolly grandfathers and grandmothers. Age may bring its handicaps, but it also brings its blessings. There is the calmness of purpose that the fires of youth insist on burning up. As for me, I rather welcome the sunset of life. I want to live as long as I can, but since eternal life is denied all that sooner or later I shall be going down the far shady side, I want to get into a condition to welcome it. I never saw an old man sighing over his age, and I have no reason to believe that I shall be an exception. So if you not happy over growing old, the thing to do is to get brappy.

The Latest Big Ship.

The world's largest ship, the Amerika left Hamburg for New York, October 11, and her record will excite general interest. She is 687 feet long, 74 feet six wide, 53 feet deep, is of 42,000 tons displacement, and can carry 4,000 passengers and a crew of 520, with 16,000 tons cargo. Among her innovations are a restaurant where meals are served at a la carte at all hours, with seats for 120. The ship has a florist's shop, electric passenger elevators, gymnasium, state-room telephones, medical baths and a corps of trained nurses. There are numerous splendidly decorated apartments, including a main dining hall 100 feet long and extending the full width of the ship. A two-story smoking room is provided for the men, copied from the hunting room of an Elizabethan manor house. St-erage passengers have improved booths, none of which are below the lower deck and at certain hours are permitted to exercise on the upper decks aft.

The great vessel illustrates the remarkable manner in which a modern sea voyage may be surrounded with every facility for luxury and comfort, along with the fullest provision for safety. The continents are connected with floating palaces whose swiftness is constantly improved.
